11 ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND 12 DENYING IN PART MOTION FOR 13 RULE 23(B)(2) CLASS 14 CERTIFICATION

15 Re: Dkt. No. 923

16 I. INTRODUCTION

17 Plaintiff Cody Sedlock brings a Motion for Rule 23(b)(2) Class Certification (“Motion”) in 18 which he asks the Court to certify a proposed Rule 23(b)(2) class and appoint Korein Tillery LLC 19 and Pearson, Simon & Warshaw, LLP as Co-Lead Class Counsel for the proposed (b)(2) class as well as the (b)(3) classes that have already been certified.¹ A hearing on the Motion was held via Zoom webinar on June 25, 2021 at 9:30 a.m. For the reasons stated below, the Motion is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part.²

20 II. BACKGROUND

21 A. Procedural Background Related to Class Certification under Rule 23³

22 Plaintiffs are minor league baseball players who assert claims under the federal Fair Labor 23 Standards Act (“FLSA”) and the wage-and-hour laws of California, Arizona, and Florida against

24 _____
25 ¹ These firms were appointed as interim co-lead counsel at the outset of the case. See dkt. no. 236.
Defendants have not opposed their appointment as class counsel for the (b)(3) classes or the proposed (b)(2) class.

26 ² The parties have consented to the jurisdiction of a magistrate judge pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 636(c).

27 ³ Because the instant motion addresses only the propriety of certifying a class under Rule 23(b)(2), the Court does not include herein the procedural background relating to class certification under the FLSA.

1 Major League Baseball (“MLB”), MLB Commissioner Bud Selig, and 22 MLB franchises 2 (“Franchise Defendants”).⁴ Plaintiff Cody Sedlock is a current minor league baseball player; the 3 remaining plaintiffs are former minor league baseball players.

4 Early on in the case, the Franchise Defendants brought a Motion to Dismiss the Second 5 Consolidated Amended Complaint in Part for Lack of Subject Matter Jurisdiction and for Failure 6 to State a Claim. Dkt. No. 410. In that motion, the Franchise Defendants asked the Court to 7 dismiss certain state law causes of action under Rules 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(6) of the Federal Rules 8 of Civil Procedure on the basis that Plaintiffs lacked standing as to these claim and/or that they 9 failed to state a claim. Id. at 1. Both arguments were based on the premise that in order to have 10 standing to assert a claim against a particular defendant under a particular state’s law there must be 11 a named Plaintiff who is alleged to have performed work for that defendant in that state. Id. at 4.
12 The Franchise Defendants argued that the standing question had to be resolved prior to class 13 certification as a threshold matter of jurisdiction. The Court disagreed, concluding that it was 14 appropriate to defer ruling on standing until the class certification stage of the case. Dkt. No. 420 15 (“Article III Standing Order”).

16 While the Court did not decide the standing question in its Article III Standing Order, it 17 “summarize[d] . . . the relevant case law on standing in Rule 23 class actions and addresse[d] some 18 of the cases cited by the parties in support of their positions.” Id. at 15-16. It observed that 19 addressing standing in the class action context “is ‘complicated . . . because a named plaintiff 20 seeks to litigate the claims of others’” Id. at 16 (quoting Newberg on Class Actions § 2.6).
21 “Thus, while the ‘underlying standing principle is that the injury that a plaintiff suffers defines the 22 scope of the controversy she is entitled to litigate,’ in the class context there is a ‘disjuncture’ 23 because ‘the class representative may seek to litigate harms not precisely analogous to the ones 24 she suffered but harms that were nonetheless suffered by other class members.’” Id. (quoting 25 Newberg on Class Actions § 2.6). Thus, “courts have ‘grapple[d] with whether this type of

26
27

⁴ While there are currently 22 Franchise Defendants, Plaintiffs originally named 30 Franchises as 28 defendants. The Court dismissed eight of the franchises for lack of personal jurisdiction in its May 20, 2015 Order, dkt. no. 379.

1 dispute is really one of standing or more properly one of typicality and adequacy of representation
2 in the class certification phase.’ ” Id. at 17 (quoting Ogden v. Bumble Bee Foods, LLC, Case No.
3 C-12-1828 LHK, 292 F.R.D. 620, 623 (N.D. Cal. 2013)).

4 The undersigned described the tension in the Supreme Court’s decisions, the lack of clear 5 guidance in the Ninth Circuit’s decisions and the split of authority among district courts in the 6 Ninth Circuit. It noted that some Ninth Circuit decisions “support the conclusion that it is 7 enough, in a class action, to demonstrate that ‘at least one named Plaintiff meets the 8 requirements.’ ” Id. at 20 (quoting Bates v. United Parcel Service, Inc., 511 F.3d 974, 985 (9th 9 Cir. 2007)) and found that “[u]nder this approach, Plaintiffs’ allegations in the SCAC may be 10 sufficient to show Article III standing because all of the Franchise Defendants are alleged to have 11 employed one or more named Plaintiff, there is a named Plaintiff who has standing to invoke 12 every state’s law and all Plaintiffs have demonstrated actual injury by alleging that one of the 13 Franchise Defendants failed to pay them at all for some work and also failed to pay them required 14 overtime.” Id. The Court declined to decide the question, however, because it found that “at a 15 minimum, it is appropriate to address whether there is standing to assert the claims that are 16 challenged by the Franchise Defendants after class certification.” Id.

17 In March 2016, Plaintiffs moved the Court to certify Rule 23(b)(3) and Rule 23(b)(2) 18 classes under the laws of eight states’ laws to pursue minimum wage and overtime violation 19 claims for baseball activities performed throughout the year. Dkt. No. 496. The Court denied the 20 motion in full. Dkt. No. 687 (“First Class Certification Order”). The Court found, inter alia, that 21 because Plaintiffs sought compensation for work players performed during the off season, it would 22 be difficult to determine class membership. Id. at 59-60. The Court reasoned that in contrast to 23 the activities players engage in during spring training, the championship season and instructional 24 leagues, “there appear to be wide variations in the types of activities in which minor league 25 players engaged to meet their winter training obligations, the degree of discretion players had as to 26 how they conducted their winter training and the degree of supervision over the players by the 27 Clubs. As a consequence, to evaluate which of the players’ winter training activities constituted 28 ‘work’ would be much more likely to involve highly individualized inquiries that make the class

1 definition ‘unworkable.’” Id. at 60. The Court further concluded that Plaintiffs failed to satisfy the 2 typicality and adequacy requirements of Rule 23, as Plaintiffs could not demonstrate that “the 3 representatives, as a group, [could] assert timely claims based on all of the various types of 4 activities that [were] the subject of the class claims asserted under the state’s laws.” Id. at 65-66, 5 68. The Court denied certification of the Rule 23(b)(2) classes for the additional reason that all of 6 the named Plaintiffs at that time were former minor league players and therefore, they did not have 7 standing to seek injunctive and declaratory relief. Id. at 92-93.

8 Plaintiffs subsequently brought a motion for reconsideration, asking the Court to certify 9 narrower classes under Rule 23(b)(2) and (b)(3). Dkt. No. 720. In particular, Plaintiffs asked the 10 Court to certify under Rule 23(b)(3) an Arizona class and a Florida class for work performed in 11 those states during spring training, extended spring training, and the instructional leagues.
12 Plaintiffs also asked the Court to certify under Rule 23(b)(3) a California class that included 13 players who participated in the California League during the championship season. In addition, 14 Plaintiffs requested certification of Rule 23(b)(2) injunctive relief classes consisting of current 15 minor league players who participate in spring training, extended spring training, or the 16 instructional leagues in Florida and Arizona. To address the Court’s concerns about standing, four 17 then-current minor league players moved to intervene to represent the proposed (b)(2) class.
18 Plaintiffs pointed to the results of a survey conducted by their expert (“the Main Survey”) and 19 other documentary evidence such as training schedules to show that the average hours worked 20 during spring training, instructional leagues and the championship season could be quantified on a 21 classwide basis such that Plaintiffs’ claims were amenable to class treatment.

22 In its March 17, 2017 Order, the Court found that the Main Survey was admissible under 23 Daubert, denying Defendants’ motion to exclude it, and concluded that in combination with other 24 evidence, it was sufficient to show that Rule 23(b)(3)’s predominance requirement was met as to 25 the proposed California class. Dkt. No. 782 (“Second Class Certification Order”) at 56-57. The 26 Court also found that as to all of the proposed classes, Rule 23(a)’s numerosity, commonality and 27 typicality requirements were met. Id. at 49. The Court found, however, that with respect to the 28 Florida and Arizona classes, the adequacy requirement of Rule 23(a) and the predominance

1 requirement of Rule 23(b)(3) were defeated by choice of law concerns. Id. at 50-51, 63-65.
2 Similarly, the Court concluded that certification of Plaintiffs' proposed Rule 23(b)(2) classes was 3 inappropriate because the Court "could not necessarily adjudicate the claims of the Rule 23(b)(2) 4 classes or fashion a remedy . . . based on the law of only one or two states" but instead "could 5 potentially be required to apply the law of numerous states to Plaintiffs' claims, which 6 undermine[d] the cohesiveness of the class." Id. at 66.

7 At Defendants' request, the district court certified the Second Class Certification Order for 8 interlocutory review under 28 U.S.C. § 1292. The Ninth Circuit granted both Defendants' petition 9 for permission to appeal the certification of the California class and Plaintiffs' petition for 10 permission to appeal the denial of certification for the Arizona, Florida, and Rule 23(b)(2) classes 11 and the appeals were consolidated. The Ninth Circuit affirmed this Court's certification of the 12 California class but reversed as to its denial of certification of the Arizona, Florida and (b)(2) 13 classes, concluding that the Court's choice of law analysis was incorrect. Senne v. Kansas City 14 Royals Baseball Corp., 934 F.3d 918, 933-937 (9th Cir. 2019), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 248 (2020).

15 In its decision, the Ninth Circuit found that Plaintiffs' proposed Florida and Arizona (b)(3) 16 classes would not raise choice of law problems because the claims for each of these classes would 17 be governed by the law where the work occurred for all class members, that is, the law of Florida 18 and Arizona. Id. It further found that the Court's "errors in its choice-of-law analysis relating to 19 the proposed Arizona and Florida Rule 23(b)(3) classes appl[ied] equally to its refusal to certify 20 the proposed Rule 23(b)(2) class." Id. at 937. In addition, it concluded the Court "erred in 21 imposing a 'cohesiveness' requirement for the proposed Rule 23(b)(2) class[,]” explaining as 22 follows:

23 Although we have never explicitly addressed whether 24 "cohesiveness" is required under Rule 23(b)(2), courts that have 25 imposed such a test treat it similarly to Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance 26 inquiry—something we have previously rejected in no uncertain 27 terms. See Walters v. Reno, 145 F.3d 1032, 1047 (9th Cir. 1998) 28 ("[W]ith respect to 23(b)(2) in particular, the government's dogged focus on the factual differences among the class members appears to demonstrate a fundamental misunderstanding of the rule. Although common issues must predominate for class certification under Rule 23(b)(3), no such requirement exists under 23(b)(2)."); see also 2 Newberg on Class Actions § 4:34 (5th ed. 2012) (describing similarity between predominance under Rule 23(b)(3) and "cohesiveness") under Rule 23(b)(2) in courts that have adopted it).

Id. at 937-938. For these reasons, the Ninth Circuit reversed this Court's denial of certification of the Rule 23(b)(2) classes and remanded for further consideration of whether they should be certified.

B. The Motion

In the Motion, Plaintiffs ask the Court to certify the following (b)(2) class:

Any person who is or will in the future be signed to a Minor League Uniform Player Contract and performs services pursuant to that contract in Florida, Arizona, or California.

Motion at 1. According to Plaintiffs, "The primary differences between the (b)(2) class and the already-certified (b)(3) classes are the forms of relief sought and membership in the classes." Id. In particular, while the (b)(3) classes are composed of current and former players seeking retrospective relief, namely damages, the proposed (b)(2) class will include current and future players seeking "prospective relief in the form of an injunction, enjoining Defendants' unlawful wage practices, and corresponding declaratory relief." Id.

Plaintiffs contend the requirements of Rule 23(b)(2) and all the requirements of Rule 23(a) are satisfied. They further contend the proposed class representative, Cody Sedlock, has standing to represent the (b)(2) class.⁵

According to Plaintiffs, the requirements of Rule 23(b)(2) are "plainly met." Id. at 3. Rule 23(b)(2) provides that "[o]ne or more members of a class may sue ... as representative parties on behalf of all members only if ... the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Plaintiffs contend this requirement is satisfied here because the proposed (b)(2) class seeks "uniform injunctive or declaratory relief from policies or practices that are generally applicable to the class as a whole."

⁵ Sedlock, who is currently a minor league player for a team affiliated with the Baltimore Orioles, seeks to represent the (b)(2) class because the four putative (b)(2) representatives who sought certification in 2016 have ended their minor league careers.

1 Id. at 3 (quoting Parsons v. Ryan, 754 F.3d 657, 688 (9th Cir. 2014)). Specifically, Plaintiffs 2 point to the Court’s finding in its First Class Certification Order “that Defendants’ uniform wage-3 and-hour policies and practices apply to all minor leaguers: Defendants do not pay minimum 4 wages during training seasons, overtime during any season, and they do not keep time records.”
5 Id. (citing First Class Certification Order at 62-63; Senne, 934 F.3d at 923, 944). Thus, Plaintiffs 6 contend, the Court could award indivisible relief to the (b)(2) class as a whole in the form of “[a] 7 judicial declaration that Defendants are bound by the wage-and-hour laws of Florida, Arizona, and 8 California and an injunction mandating Defendant’s compliance with the wage and record-keeping 9 requirements of those laws.” Id.

10 Plaintiffs further assert that the numerosity and commonality requirements of Rule 23(a) 11 are satisfied by the proposed (b)(2) class. Id. at 4-5. As to numerosity, they note that the Court 12 found that all previously proposed classes were sufficiently numerous, and Defendants never 13 disagreed. Id. at 4 (citing First Class Certification Order at 55; Second Class Certification Order at 14 49). Likewise, they point to the Court’s findings in its First and Second Class Certification Orders 15 that the commonality requirement was met. Id. According to Plaintiffs, in those Orders, the Court 16 found that the class claims raised common issues as to “whether the Clubs and MLB are joint 17 employers;” “whether the activities Minor League players perform at the ballpark and/or in 18 connection with games constitute ‘work’ for the purposes of the applicable wage and hour laws;” 19 and “whether the common compensation policies applied to Minor Leaguers by Defendants under 20 the Minor League Rules and Uniform Player Contracts—including failure to pay players a salary 21 outside the championship season and failure to pay minimum wage and overtime during the 22 championship season—violate the applicable wage and hour laws.” Id. Plaintiffs contend 23 “[t]hose are the same key questions that will need answering to provide the relief sought in the 24 proposed (b)(2) class” and therefore, that commonality is satisfied here as well. Id. at 5.

25 Next, Plaintiffs address the question of Sedlock’s standing to represent the proposed (b)(2) 26 class, pointing to the Court’s observation that courts have “grappled” with the question of whether 27 a class representative’s ability to represent class members whose claims are not identical to those 28 of the class representative should be treated as a question of standing or rather, as a matter of

1 adequacy and typicality under Rule 23. Id. at 5 (citing Article III Standing Order at 16). Plaintiffs 2 contend, “Mr. Sedlock plainly has standing to represent a class of employees working in Florida 3 for MLB like himself” but recognize that “his standing to represent employees working in 4 California and Arizona or working in any state for any of the twenty-two Franchise Defendants 5 may be less immediately apparent.” Id. at 5. Plaintiffs argue, however, that Sedlock’s 6 “individual standing should be beyond legitimate dispute” because he is currently a minor league
7 pitcher for an MLB affiliate who is entering his sixth season under the same Uniform Players 8 Contract that binds all class members and he participates in spring training in Florida (where he 9 was, in fact, training when the Motion was filed). Id. at 5-6.

10 Further, Plaintiffs assert, “the question of whether Sedlock can represent injunctive relief 11 claims against the twenty-two Franchise Defendants or seek relief under Arizona and California 12 law is a Rule 23 question, not a question of standing.” Id. at 6 (citing Melendres v. Arpaio, 784 13 F.3d 1254, 1262 (9th Cir. 2015) (quoting Newberg on Class Actions § 2:6)). Plaintiffs recognize 14 that some courts within this district have “continued to take divergent approaches to such issues 15 when a plaintiff with standing seeks to represent class members whose claims arise under a 16 different state’s law.” Id. at 6-7 (citing Rivera v. Invitation Homes, Inc., No. 18-cv-03158-JSW, 17 2019 WL 11863726, at *4 (N.D. Cal. 2019) (applying a standing approach) and In re Chrysler-Dodge-Jeep Ecodiesel Mktg., Sales Practices, and Prods. Liab. Litig., 295 F. Supp. 3d 927 (N.D.
18 Cal. 2018) (applying a class certification approach)). They argue, however, that the class 19 certification approach is correct, having been explicitly endorsed by the Ninth Circuit, the 20 Supreme Court and most other federal courts to have addressed the issue. Id. (citing Melendres, 21 784 F.3d at 1262).

22 Plaintiffs argue that even if the Court were to conclude that these questions implicate
23 Article III standing, it should take the approach that was taken by the First Circuit in In re Asacol Antitrust Litig., in which the court concluded that the Article III standing inquiry “track[ed]” the 24 Rule 23 analysis, leading the court to conclude that the named plaintiffs had standing to represent 25 class members whose claims were asserted under parallel laws of other states that were not 26 materially different from the laws governing the named plaintiffs’ claims because they nonetheless 27

1 had a personal stake in the outcome of the case. Id. at 10-11 (citing 907 F.3d 42, 49 (1st Cir.
2 2018)).

3 Under the class certification approach, Plaintiffs contend, Sedlock meets both the typicality 4 and adequacy requirements of Rule 23. Id. at 12-17. As to typicality, Plaintiffs argue that 5 Sedlock's claims against MLB are typical of the claims of class members who work or will work 6 in Florida because he is a minor league player who, like other players who work in Florida, has 7 been underpaid in violation of Florida's wage-and-hour laws. Id. at 12-13. Plaintiffs contend 8 Sedlock's claims against MLB are also typical of the claims of class members against MLB who 9 play or will play in California and Arizona because those states have parallel wage and reporting 10 laws that are not materially different from Florida law and all minor leaguers who are being and 11 will be underpaid under the three states' laws have a substantial and shared interest in proving that 12 the underpayments are the result of MLB's unlawful wage practices and can be redressed by a 13 judicial decision. Id. at 13-15.

14 Plaintiffs argue further that "the differences among the three states' wage laws—different 15 wage rates and differences in recordkeeping requirements—are not relevant to the proposed (b)(2) 16 class" because the class will seek only prospective relief, namely, "1) a declaration that 17 Defendants' wage policies—not to pay players in compliance with applicable wage-and-hour laws 18 and not to keep time records—are unlawful, and 2) an injunction, both prohibitory and mandatory, 19 forbidding continued enforcement of those wage policies and mandating compliance with 20 applicable wage and record-keeping requirements." According to Plaintiffs, "[a] single 21 declaration and injunction can accomplish those objectives, whether based on Arizona, Florida, or 22 California law—or all three." Id. at 15.

23 Plaintiffs also argue that Sedlock's claims against the Franchise Defendants are typical of 24 the claims of class members who play or will play in Florida, California, and Arizona because 25 under Rule 65(d)(2), injunctive relief is binding not only on "(A) parties" and "(B) their officers, 26 agents, servants, employees, and attorneys[,] but also on "(C) other persons who are in active 27 concert or participation with anyone described in Rule 65(d)(2)(A) or (B)" so long as they receive 28 "actual notice" of the injunction. Id. at 15. According to Plaintiffs, the Franchise Defendants

1 meet these requirements because, as parties, they will receive actual notice of any injunction the 2 Court enters in this litigation and they have admitted that they are “in active … participation” with 3 MLB. Id. (citing MLB’s Answer (Dkt. No. 386) at 15 ¶ 62 (“admit that the Office of the 4 Commissioner of Baseball, d/b/a MLB, is an unincorporated association, also doing business as 5 Major League Baseball, and it is currently comprised of 30 Major League Baseball Clubs”); 6 Giants’ Answer (Dkt. No. 407) at 13 ¶ 62 (same)).

7 Plaintiffs argue further that Sedlock meets the typicality requirement despite the general 8 rule that “ ‘typicality is lacking when the representative plaintiff’s cause of action is against a 9 defendant unrelated to the defendants against whom the cause of action of the members of the 10 class lies.’ ” Id. at 16 (quoting La Mar v. H & B Novelty & Loan Co., 489 F.2d 461, 465 (9th Cir.
11 1973)). This is because there is an exception where “ ‘all injuries are the result of a conspiracy or 12 concerted schemes between the defendants at whose hands the class suffered injury’ or ‘in 13 instances in which all defendants are juridically related in a manner that suggests a single 14 resolution of the dispute would be expeditious.’ ” Id. (quoting La Mar, 489 F.2d at 466).
15 According to Plaintiffs, the Court has already found that the first exception applies because 16 “Defendants ‘have come together to form MLB by enacting the MLB constitution and have jointly 17 issued the MLB rules and UPC pursuant to that constitution.’ ” Id. at 16 (quoting First Class 18 Certification Order at 64).

19 Plaintiffs argue that Sedlock also satisfies Rule 23(a)’s adequacy requirement, which 20 requires that the named plaintiff have no conflicts of interest with any other class member and that 21 the named plaintiff and plaintiff’s counsel will vigorously prosecute the action on behalf of the 22 class. Id. at 17 (citing In re Hyundai and Kia Fuel Economy Litig., 926 F.3d 539, 566 (9th Cir.
23 2019)). The first requirement is met, Plaintiffs contend, because Sedlock “is signed to the same 24 Uniform Player Contract as all other players, and his ‘primary goal in pursuing this lawsuit is to 25 bring a stop to the unlawful and unfair employment and compensation policies that Defendants 26 have subjected upon [himself] and other minor leaguers.’ ” Id. (quoting Sedlock Decl. ¶ 11).
27 Plaintiffs further assert that the very fact Sedlock came forward to represent the class after the 28 former (b)(2) representatives’ careers ended is an indication that he will vigorously prosecute the

1 action as he is the only current player with the “mettle” to risk jeopardizing his career to represent 2 the class. Id.

3 Finally, Plaintiffs ask the Court to formally appoint the firms Korein Tillery, LLC and 4 Pearson, Simon & Warshaw LLP, which were previously appointed as interim co-lead counsel, as 5 class counsel for the (b)(3) classes and the (b)(2) class. Id. at 17.

6 C. The Opposition

7 In their Opposition, Defendants contend Sedlock does not have Article III standing to 8 represent the proposed (b)(2) class or to pursue claims under California or Arizona law and that 9 the proposed (b)(2) class also does not meet the requirements of Rule 23. With respect to 10 standing, Defendants assert that “a plaintiff lacks Article III standing to seek an injunction against 11 any entities which do not imminently threaten to harm him, or with respect to injuries which he 12 has not personally experienced[,]” citing past decisions by the undersigned. Opposition at 5 13 (citing Bowler v. Home Depot USA Inc., No. C-09-05523, 2010 WL 3619850 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 13, 14 2010); Ctr. for Biological Diversity v. Envtl. Protection Agency, No. 11-cv-00293, 2013 WL 15 1729573 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 22, 2013)).

16 Defendants also point to the Court’s discussion of Article III standing in the Article III 17 Standing Order. Id. at 6. According to Defendants, in that Order, the Court recognized that “in 18 order to establish threshold Article III standing in a case involving multiple defendants, there must 19 be ‘at least one named Plaintiff who is alleged to have suffered direct injury as a result of the 20 conduct of each Franchise Defendant’ ” Id. (quoting Article III Standing Order at 26; and 21 citing id. at 21 (finding that the Ninth Circuit’s ruling in Easter v. American West Financial, 381 22 F.3d 948 (9th Cir. 2004) stands for the “unremarkable proposition that for a class action to 23 proceed between the named parties, each named plaintiff must have standing to sue at least each 24 named defendant...”) (quoting In re Carrier IQ, Inc., Case No. C-12-MD-2330 EMC, 2015 WL 25 274054, at *10 (N.D. Cal., Jan. 21, 2015))). Defendants further assert that this Court held in the 26 Article III Standing Order that in “order to have threshold Article III standing to bring class claims 27 under multiple states’ laws, ‘at least one named plaintiff’ must have ‘performed work for each 28 individual defendant in the state whose law is being invoked.’ ” Id. (citing Article III Standing

1 Order at 18 (citing Ross v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 542 F. Supp. 2d 1014, 1023 (N.D. Cal. 2008)).

2 Based on these “well-settled principles,” Defendants assert that it is clear that Sedlock 3 lacks “threshold Article III standing.” Id. at 7. According to Defendants, because Sedlock has 4 played exclusively for a team affiliated with the Baltimore Orioles (a club that is no longer a 5 defendant in this case),⁶ he “has no wage-and-hour injury traceable to any Defendant in this case, 6 or traceable to any baseball activities in Arizona or California.” Id. To establish Article III 7 standing as to the proposed (b)(2) class, Defendants contend, Plaintiffs must “proffer at least one 8 current player who alleges injury by each of those 22 Club Defendants, and at least one current 9 player who alleges injuries under each of the wage-and-hour laws of Florida, Arizona and 10 California.” Id. Defendants argue that because Plaintiffs have failed to meet that burden, the 11 (b)(2) class cannot be certified. Id. at 7-8.

12 Defendants reject Plaintiffs’ arguments that Sedlock’s claims against MLB under Florida 13 law are sufficient to confer standing to represent the proposed (b)(2) class and that “the Article III 14 deficiencies at issue should be analyzed under the Rule 23 framework.” Id. at 8. As to the first 15 argument, which is based on the assertion that MLB is Sedlock’s joint employer along with the 16 Baltimore Orioles, Defendants point to deposition testimony by Sedlock in which he allegedly 17 admitted that MLB is not his employer and is “not responsible for any of the conduct underlying 18 his minimum wage and overtime claims in this case.” Id. at 9 (citing Bloom Decl., Ex. A 19 (Sedlock Depo.) at 12:9-20, 104:6-15, 124:6-11, 14:21-24). Moreover, Defendants contend, a 20 named plaintiff must have standing to sue under all of the states’ laws at issue, which Sedlock 21 does not. Id. Defendants argue, “Even if Sedlock did have standing with respect to MLB (which 22 he does not), it is plainly insufficient for a class representative to have standing with respect to 23 only one Defendant out of twenty-three against whom he seeks an injunction, and under only one 24 state’s law out of the three states’ laws under which he seeks injunctive relief.” Id. at 10.

25 Defendants also reject Plaintiffs’ argument that the question of standing should be

27

⁶ Plaintiffs named the Baltimore Orioles in their Second Amended Class Action Complaint. Dkt. No. 57. However, the Court dismissed the Baltimore Orioles in 2015 based on lack of personal jurisdiction. Dkt. No. 379.

1 reframed as a Rule 23 certification issue but argue that even under that approach Sedlock cannot 2 represent the class because he does not satisfy Rule 23's typicality and adequacy requirements. Id.
3 As to whether the Court should apply an Article III standing approach or instead apply Rule 23
4 standards, Defendants argue that Plaintiffs' reliance on Melendres v. Arpaio in support of the latter 5 approach is misplaced because in that case, "the parties did not dispute that the individual named 6 plaintiffs had 'individual standing to bring their own claims.'" Id. at 11-12 (citing 784 F.3d 1254, 7 1262 (9th Cir. 2015)). Regarding whether the proposed (b)(2) class satisfies the requirements of 8 Rule 23(a), Defendants argue that findings by the Ninth Circuit on this question do not apply 9 because Plaintiffs have broadened the class definition by "seek[ing] certification of a class that 10 includes claims under California law in addition to claims under the laws of Arizona and Florida, 11 and have greatly expanded the types of activities that would be covered by the proposed injunction 12 to encompass all activities performed by any player – without regard to whether they were 'team-13 related activities' performed during the team training periods at Club facilities, which is how 14 Plaintiffs proposed to remedy the defects associated with their initial class certification bid." Id.
15 at 13.

16 Even if Plaintiffs sought certification of the narrower (b)(2) classes previously proposed 17 and considered by this Court and the Ninth Circuit, Defendants assert that they still would not 18 satisfy the requirements of Rule 23(b)(2) because Sedlock is "purporting to seek injunctive relief 19 against 22 Defendants with whom he alleges to have no relationship, under the laws of states in 20 which he admits he has never played baseball." Id. at 13-14. According to Defendants, in its 21 First Class Certification Order, the Court "identified a nearly identical deficiency with respect to 22 the 'typicality' of Plaintiffs' proposed classes under Rule 23(a)." Id. at 14. In particular, 23 Defendants assert that even though the Court found that Defendants were "juridically related," it 24 "nonetheless concluded that the proffered class representatives were not typical of the absent class 25 because the class representatives did not have cognizable claims under the laws of the states they 26 purported to represent." Id. (citing First Class Certification Order at 66). Defendants point to the 27 example offered by the Court of Plaintiff Ryan Khoury, "who sought to represent a class seeking 28 recovery under the wage-and-hour laws of New York despite having only played baseball in New

1 York during occasional away games.” Id. According to Defendants, the Court found that 2 “Khoury was not ‘typical’ of the proposed class due to his lack of contact with the state of New 3 York.” Id. (citing First Class Certification Order at 66). Defendants contend Sedlock’s situation 4 is “even more extreme” because he “admits that he never played baseball in the minor leagues in 5 the states of California or Arizona.” Id.

6 Defendants reject Plaintiffs’ assertion that the Court’s previous concerns about typicality 7 are “no longer pertinent because at the time of their first certification motion, Plaintiffs had 8 previously proposed ‘much broader classes’ involving state laws with substantive ‘variance,’ 9 which they claim to have cured here.” Id. at 15 (citing Motion at 14). In fact, Defendants argue, 10 the broader (b)(2) class Plaintiffs now propose, “seeking relief for any and all baseball activities, 11 without limiting what type of activities are to be covered, including individual (rather than team-12 related) activities, and without providing a minimum amount of time to be spent in each state in 13 order for that state’s law to apply[,]” “now bears a much closer resemblance to the classes they 14 had initially proposed.” Id. As to the variances between states’ laws, Defendants argue that the 15 Court’s previous ruling “did not turn on the number of state laws under which Plaintiffs were 16 proposing classes” but instead was based on “the fact that Plaintiffs proffered representatives for 17 claims brought under the laws of states in which the representatives themselves had little or no 18 contact” – a problem that remains because Sedlock has had no contact with California or Arizona 19 as a minor leaguer. Id.

20 Defendants also challenge Plaintiffs’ assertion that typicality is met because the laws of the 21 three states are not materially different. Id. at 16. According to Defendants, Plaintiffs ignore the 22 Ninth Circuit’s finding that the wage and hour laws of the three states are, in fact, materially 23 different. Id. (citing 934 F.3d at 933). Defendants argue further that In re Asacol Antitrust 24 Litigation, 907 F.3d 42 (1st Cir. 2018), upon which Plaintiffs rely, “actually confirms the fact that 25 where state laws materially differ, a class representative may not bring claims under the laws of 26 states in which he has had no contact.” Id. In Asacol, Defendants contend, “the First Circuit 27 permitted class representatives in an antitrust suit to bring claims arising under [the laws of] states 28 in which the representatives had no contact, because the laws at issue were all ‘parallel’ to federal

1 law, and thus the judgments under each state's law would all look the same." Id. at 16-17 (citing
2 907 F.3d at 49). On the other hand, Defendants assert, "To the extent New York law did differ 3 materially compared to the others . . . the First Circuit concluded that the plaintiffs had waived any 4 opposition to their lack of standing to pursue claims under that law." Id. at 17.

5 Defendants also contend there is "ample evidence" that Sedlock will not prosecute the case 6 vigorously and therefore will not be an adequate class representative. Id. at 17. They point to 7 Sedlock's insistence that his deposition – which occurred during spring training – be conducted on 8 an off day. Id. (citing Bloom Decl., Ex. A (Sedlock Depo.) at 16:10-17:11, 21:9-19). Defendants 9 also point to deposition testimony indicating that Sedlock intends to seek individual damages 10 under Maryland law for his offseason activities, creating a substantial risk that he will have 11 different priorities and litigation interests than the (b)(2) class members. Id. at 17-18. Defendants 12 also challenge Sedlock's adequacy as a class representative because the claims he asserts under 13 Florida and Maryland law are materially dissimilar from the claims of absent class members under 14 Arizona and California law. Id. at 18.

15 Defendants also assert that there "are no common answers to the questions raised in 16 Plaintiffs' request for injunctive relief, since determining which activities constitute compensable 17 work, and under which state laws, requires highly individualized analysis that cannot be conducted 18 on a classwide basis." Id. at 18-19. Therefore, Defendants assert, Plaintiffs have "reintroduced" a 19 lack of commonality. Id.

20 Defendants also do not agree that Plaintiffs "easily" satisfy Rule 23(b)(2) in light of their 21 "broadened" class definition. Id. at 20-24. First, Defendants contend Sedlock cannot seek any of 22 the injunctive relief Plaintiffs seek for the (b)(2) class, addressing Defendants' alleged failure to 23 pay minimum wage or overtime or keep time records, because it is undisputed that "MLB is not 24 responsible for payment of Sedlock's wages and does not have any control over the number of 25 hours Sedlock allegedly worked – the two levers of any minimum wage and overtime claim." Id.
26 at 19 (citing Bloom Decl., Ex. A (Sedlock Depo.) at 12:12-20; 47:21-25; 121:25-126:10; 138:13-27 139:8). Likewise, Defendants assert, MLB is not responsible for payment of wages or the number 28 of hours minor leaguers in the proposed (b)(2) class work. Id. at 19-20. Because it is the 1 Franchises that are responsible for these things, Defendants assert, and Sedlock has no connection

2 to the 22 Franchise Defendants, he will not be able to obtain any injunctive relief for the proposed 3 (b)(2) class. Id. (quoting Rule 23(b)(2) (requiring that “the party opposing the class has acted or 4 refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or 5 corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole.”)).

6 Defendants further contend Rule 23(b)(2) is not met because the relief a (b)(2) class seeks 7 must be indivisible. Id. at 20. According to Defendants, that requirement is not satisfied because 8 Plaintiffs seek relief for the proposed (b)(2) class under “three different state laws, including 9 California law, which is different in material respects from Arizona and Florida law such that 10 different injunctions would be necessary to provide class members with any purported relief.” Id.
11 In addition, Defendants argue, because Plaintiffs have broadened the class to “seek injunctive 12 relief for all ‘services’ performed in Florida, Arizona, or California pursuant to a Minor League
13 Uniform Player Contract,” they have “necessarily revive[d] the choice-of-law and compensability 14 problems that doomed Plaintiffs’ first unsuccessful attempt at class certification given that this 15 proposed class encompasses activities performed during the championship season and offseason, 16 including individual activities.” Id. Defendants point out that minor leaguers train in many states 17 during the off season, not just in California, Florida or Arizona, and argue that the Court would be 18 required to engage in choice-of-law analysis as to those activities. Id. at 21.

19 Defendants also argue that the injunctive relief Plaintiffs seek is impermissibly vague and 20 is nothing more than a bare injunction to follow the law, which is disfavored. Id. (citing Roman v.
21 MSL Cap., LLC, No. EDCV172066JGBSPX, 2019 WL 3017765, at *5 (C.D. Cal. July 22 9, 2019), aff’d, 820 F. App’x 592 (9th Cir. 2020) (denying permanent injunction “to prevent future 23 violations of the fair housing laws” because such an “obey the law” injunction is disfavored and at 24 odds with Rule 65(d.”); Comm. Concerning Cnty. Improvement v. City of Modesto, No. CV-F-25 04-6121 REC/DLB, 2004 WL 7334944, at *18 (E.D. Cal. Dec. 30, 2004)). Defendants contend, 26 “Plaintiffs . . . fail to specify the conduct that they seek to enjoin or how Defendants must comply 27 with the ‘wage-and-hour laws’ of the three states at issue.” Id. at 22.

28 Finally, Defendants argue that Rule 23(b)(2) is not satisfied because the injunctive relief

1 the proposed class seeks is a “thinly-veiled request for monetary damages.” Id. Defendants assert 2 that “Rule 23(b)(2) certification is not appropriate where, as here, ‘the plaintiff has ostensibly 3 disavowed any claim for damages, but where the nature of [the] claim says otherwise.’ ” Id.
4 (quoting AA Suncoast Chiropractic Clinic, P.A. v. Progressive Am. Ins. Co., 938 F.3d 1170, 1177 5 (11th Cir. 2019)). Defendants point to deposition testimony of Sedlock in which he stated that he 6 was seeking to recover minimum wage and overtime for time spent playing baseball with the 7 Orioles since 2016. Id. at 22-23 (quoting Bloom Decl., Ex. A at 104:6-106:19). According to 8 Defendants, other courts have denied (b)(2) class certification under similar circumstances. Id.
9 (citing Gomez v. J. Jacobo Farm Labor Contractor, Inc., 334 F.R.D. 234, 253 (E.D. Cal. 2019); 10 Gonzales v. Comcast Corp., No. 10-cv-01010, 2012 WL 10621 (E.D. Cal. Jan. 3, 2012)).

11 D. The Reply

12 In their Reply, Plaintiffs reject Defendants’ argument that Sedlock does not have standing 13 to assert his claims against the 22 Franchise Defendants, asserting that it is “hornbook law” that 14 “an unincorporated association is not a legal entity apart from its members [and that] the members 15 of an unincorporated association may be held civilly liable as individuals for the acts or omissions 16 of the association, whether in contract or tort.” Reply at 1 (citing 6 AM. JUR. 2D Associations and 17 Clubs § 27). That is the law in Florida (where Sedlock’s individual claims arose) as well, 18 Plaintiffs assert. Id. (citing 3A FLA. JUR. 2D Associations and Clubs §§ 16-17). Thus, Sedlock 19 “clearly has standing to assert his individual claims not only against MLB but against all 22 other 20 defendants, as well.” Id. at 2.

21 Plaintiffs also reject Defendants’ argument that the Court should decline to certify a (b)(2) 22 class because there is “no meaningful relief the Court could ever grant to the proposed class.” Id.
23 This is incorrect, Plaintiffs assert, because (b)(2) allows the Court to award both injunctive and 24 declaratory relief and Defendants have made no argument that declaratory relief is unavailable.
25 Id. Further, they assert, Defendants implicitly concede that Sedlock has Article III standing to sue 26 MLB as his joint employer under Florida law. Id. Consequently, they contend, “there is 27 meaningful, classwide, declaratory relief the Court could grant.” Id. For example, Plaintiffs 28 assert, “the Court could declare that Sedlock’s and class members’ services under the Uniform

1 Player Contract constitute compensable work; that MLB is Sedlock’s and class members’ joint 2 employer; and that Florida’s record-keeping and wage-and-hour requirements apply to MLB.” Id.
3 Thus, at a minimum the Court should certify a (b)(2) class under Florida law, Plaintiffs argue, 4 defined as “[a]ny person who is or will in the future be signed to a Minor League Uniform Player 5 Contract and performs services pursuant to that contract in Florida.” Id.

6 Plaintiffs argue that Defendants implicitly concede that Sedlock has standing to assert his 7 claims against MLB as a joint employer and that they mischaracterize his testimony in asserting 8 that he conceded that MLB is not his joint employer. Id. at 3-4. Rather, Plaintiff’s contend, 9 Sedlock testified that MLB was his joint employer. Id. at 3 (citing Broshuis Decl.), Ex. A 10 (Sedlock Depo.) at 125-127).

11 They further assert that to the extent that the (b)(2) class is certified only under Florida 12 law, many of Defendants’ objections do not apply. In particular, Plaintiffs argue that Defendants’ 13 assertion that Sedlock’s claims are not “typical” of those of class members who worked for any of 14 the 22 Franchises or who worked in Arizona or in California “obviously [is] not an objection to 15 the typicality of Plaintiff’s claims based on Florida law.” Id. at 4. Likewise, they contend, the 16 four arguments Defendants’ advance to show that Rule 23(b)(2) is not satisfied also do not apply 17 to such a class. Id.

18 Plaintiffs contend the first argument – that no classwide relief is available because Sedlock 19 has no connection with the 22 Franchise Defendants and MLB is not responsible for the payment 20 of his wages – has no merit because as to a Florida law (b)(2) class the lack of a connection to the 21 Franchise Defendants is not relevant and moreover, Defendants are factually incorrect in asserting 22 MLB is not responsible for payment of wages given that it determines minor leaguers’ wages 23 under the UPC and MLB Rules. Id. at 4-5. Plaintiffs also argue that as a joint employer MLB is 24 legally liable for violations of applicable wage laws. Id. at 5. And in any event, Plaintiffs assert, 25 this argument has no bearing on Plaintiffs’ request for declaratory relief for the (b)(2) class. Id.

26 Plaintiffs also argue that Defendants’ indivisibility objection fails as to a (b)(2) class under 27 Florida law that seeks declaratory relief because it is based on the contention that Plaintiffs “seek 28 injunctive relief under three different state laws,” which in turn “revives the choice-of-law and

1 compensability problems.” Id. at 5 (quoting Opposition at 20). Obviously, that argument does not 2 apply if the class seeks only declaratory relief under the law of a single state’s law (Florida), 3 Plaintiffs assert. Id.

4 Plaintiffs contend Defendants’ final two objections that subsection (b)(2) is not met – “that 5 ‘Plaintiffs’ purported injunction is impermissibly vague and is nothing more than a bare injunction 6 to follow the law,’ and ‘Plaintiffs’ requested injunction fails because it is a thinly veiled request 7 for monetary damages” – also have no bearing on certification of a (b)(2) class seeking 8 declaratory relief under Florida law as the first argument “applies only to injunctions, and the 9 second is inapplicable because a declaration will not compel a payment of money.” Id. at 5.

10 Plaintiffs also argue Sedlock meets the commonality and adequacy requirements. Id. at 5-11 7. Plaintiffs reject Defendants’ argument that they “reintroduce” a lack of commonality by 12 broadening the proposed class definition, pointing out that the Court has never found a lack of 13 commonality under Rule 23(a), even when it denied class certification in 2016. Id. at 6.
14 Moreover, Plaintiffs argue, Defendants are incorrect in their assertion that the (b)(2) class should 15 not be certified because “determining which activities constitute compensable work, and under 16 which state laws, requires highly individualized analysis that cannot be conducted on a classwide 17 basis.” Id. at 6. According to Plaintiffs, the Court’s concern about individualized inquiries when 18 it declined to certify a (b)(3) class in 2016 (which was based on a lack of predominance for the 19 purposes of Rule 23(b)(3) rather than lack of commonality under Rule 23(a)) does not apply here 20 because it related to the need to determine which class members were entitled to compensation, 21 especially for winter training activities; the proposed (b)(2) class, however, does not seek any 22 damage recovery for the class. Id. (citing First Class Certification Order at 81). Plaintiffs 23 acknowledge that the named Plaintiffs “do intend to seek recovery for unpaid winter training 24 wages on an individual basis” and state that “if their individual evidence warrants individual 25 damage awards, then a declaration can likely be crafted to describe at least some forms of winter 26 training that constitute compensable work” but argue this is “not the primary focus of the 27 declaratory relief Plaintiff seeks under Florida law, which is predominantly about training season 28 work in Florida.” Id.

1 Plaintiffs also reject Defendants' arguments that Sedlock will not adequately represent the 2 class. Id. at 6-7. They contend the argument that he will not vigorously represent the class 3 because he refused to sit for his deposition during spring training and insisted on scheduling it on 4 an off day during the season is "facially absurd" as he offered to schedule the deposition in the two 5 months that preceded spring training but Defendants declined that offer; moreover, according to 6 Plaintiffs the deposition was conducted only two weeks after the date Defendants originally 7 requested. Id. at 7. Plaintiffs also contend Defendants' argument that Sedlock might "someday 8 sell out the class for a bigger individual settlement" is speculative and unsupported by his 9 testimony about the reason he has agreed to serve as class representative. Id. (citing Broshuis 10 Decl.), Ex. A (Sedlock Depo.) at 230, 318).

11 Plaintiffs argue further that Sedlock can represent the (b)(2) class not only under Florida 12 law but also under Arizona and California's parallel wage and hour laws. Id. at 7. They point to 13 courts' recognition that "[t]he class action is an exception to the usual rule that litigation is 14 conducted by and on behalf of the individual named parties only." Id. (quoting Wal-Mart Stores, 15 Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338, 348 (2011) (internal quotation and citation omitted)). Thus, Plaintiffs 16 contend, "the obvious truth [is] that class actions necessarily involve plaintiffs litigating injuries 17 that they themselves would not have standing to litigate." Id. (quoting Langan v. Johnson & 18 Johnson Consumer Cos., 897 F.3d 88, 95 (2d Cir. 2018)). Plaintiffs point to the statement in 19 Langan that "[s]ince class action plaintiffs are not required to have individual standing to press 20 any of the claims belonging to their unnamed class members, it makes little sense to dismiss the 21 state law claims of unnamed class members for want of standing when there was no requirement 22 that the named plaintiffs have individual standing to bring those claims in the first place." Id.
23 (quoting 897 F.3d at 95). They further contend the Court recognized these principles in its Article 24 III Standing order, quoting the Court's statement that "'[t]ransmogrifying typicality or 25 commonality into an issue of standing would undermine the well-established principles that in a 26 class action, standing is satisfied if at least one named plaintiff meets the requirements, ... and that 27 [t]he class action is an exception to the usual rule that litigation is conducted by and on behalf of 28 the individual named parties only.' " Id. (quoting Article III Standing Order at 17) (quoting Clancy

1 v. The Bromley Tea Co., 308 F.R.D. 564, 571 (N.D. Cal. 2013)).

2 Plaintiffs argue that Defendants’ “binary” approach under which “a dissimilarity or 3 ‘disjuncture’ between the claims of named and unnamed plaintiffs is dispositive” ignores “‘the 4 obvious truth that class actions necessarily involve plaintiffs litigating injuries that they 5 themselves would not have standing to litigate.’ ” Id. at 8 (quoting Langan, 897 F.3d at 95). It is 6 also inconsistent with the Ninth Circuit’s reasoning in Melendres and Snyder, they contend. Id. at 7 9 (citing Melendres v. Arpaio, 784 F.3d 1254, 1261-62 (9th Cir. 2015); B.K. by next friend Tinsley
8 v. Snyder, 922 F.3d 957 (9th Cir. 2019)). Plaintiffs also argue that Defendants do not meaningfully 9 address the out-of-circuit authority that supports their position, namely, Langan, Morrison v. YTB 10 Intern., Inc., 649 F.3d 533 (7th Cir. 2011), and In re Asacol Antitrust Litig., 907 F.3d 42 (1st Cir.
11 2018). Id. at 9-10.

12 Plaintiffs contend Defendants’ arguments that injunctive relief is unavailable for their 13 proposed (b)(2) class fail as to a class that seeks relief under the laws of Florida, Arizona and 14 California just as they would fail as to a Florida-only class. Id. at 11-14. As a preliminary matter, 15 Plaintiffs contend, Defendants’ arguments are aimed entirely at injunctive relief and thus, even if 16 they had merit, the (b)(2) class should still be certified as to declaratory relief. Id. at 11. Plaintiffs 17 reject Defendants’ argument that an injunction entered against MLB would be ineffectual, 18 asserting that this argument “simply misconceives MLB’s liability as a joint employer.” Id.
19 According to Plaintiffs, a “‘joint employer is jointly and severally liable with the employer and 20 any other joint employers for compliance with all of the applicable provisions of the Act.’ ” Id.
21 (quoting 29 C.F.R. § 791.2). Thus, Plaintiffs assert, whether the MLB is responsible for paying 22 Sedlock’s wages or determines the hours he works is not dispositive of whether MLB is his joint 23 employer. Id. In any event, Plaintiffs contend, this is a merits question rather than a class 24 certification issue: “If MLB is found at trial to be a joint employer, then it will be liable for 25 compliance with applicable wage laws that it can be enjoined to obey.” Id. at 11-12 (citing 26 Amgen Inc. v. Conn. Ret. Plans & Tr. Funds, 568 U.S. 455 (2013)).

27 Plaintiffs also reject Defendants’ argument that the relief requested by their proposed 28 (b)(2) class runs afoul of the indivisibility requirement. Id. at 12. According to Plaintiffs, that

1 requirement “does not preclude state-specific provisions in a final injunction” but rather, “merely 2 prohibits individualized, class-member-by-class-member relief: ‘[t]he key to the (b)(2) class is the 3 indivisible nature of the injunctive or declaratory remedy warranted—the notion that the conduct 4 is such that it can be enjoined or declared unlawful only as to all of the class members or as to 5 none of them.’ ” Id. at 12 (quoting Wal-Mart, 564 U.S. at 360 (internal quotation marks
6 omitted)). Although Plaintiffs contend state-specific injunctions will likely be unnecessary, there 7 is no reason why such relief could not be awarded under Rule 23(b)(2) if after trial such relief 8 were deemed appropriate. Id. The possibility that such relief might be appropriate should not 9 defeat class certification, Plaintiffs argue. Id.

10 Plaintiffs also argue that Defendants overstate the significance of any variations between 11 the laws of the three state and fail to demonstrate that as to at least two of the common questions 12 the Court has identified – whether MLB is a joint employer and what constitutes “work” – there 13 are any outcome-determinative differences. Id. at 12-13. If these questions give rise to common 14 answers, Plaintiffs contend, “the answer to the third common question this Court identified – ‘Do 15 MLB’s compensation policies violate applicable wage and hour laws?’ – would also be the same.”
16 Id. at 13.

17 Further, Plaintiffs reject Defendants’ argument that they seek an “ ‘injunction[] 18 requiring that all minor league players are paid minimum wage and overtime for any base-ball 19 activities they perform in any of these three states irrespective of when, where, or why they 20 perform them.’ ” Id. (quoting Opposition at 21). According to Plaintiffs, they have identified the 21 “when, where, and why” because they seek “relief for services [Sedlock] and class members are 22 performing and will perform (when? now and in the future) pursuant to the Uniform Player 23 Contract (why? because the services were performed for Defendants) in Arizona, California, or 24 Florida (where).” Id. at 13-14. Likewise, Plaintiffs reject Defendants’ argument that their 25 proposed (b)(2) class “revives the choice-of-law questions,” arguing that “[b]ecause the primary 26 focus in Florida and Arizona is training seasons, and the primary focus in California is the 27 California League’s championship season, Florida, Arizona, and California law apply.” Id. at 14.

28 Plaintiffs also contend Defendants’ argument that the (b)(2) class impermissibly seeks a bare injunction to follow the law fails, pointing to an injunction in a federal wage and hour case similar to what Plaintiffs in this case might seek. Id. at 14 (quoting consent judgment in Pizzella v. Tequila's Mexican Bar & Grill, Inc., No. 19 CV 1272 (C.D. Ill.), attached to Broshuis Reply Decl., Ex. B)). According to Plaintiffs, the district court cases cited by Defendants to support their position are not on point and were neither wage and hour cases nor class actions. Id. at 14-15 (citing Roman v. MSL Capital, LLC 2019 WL 3017765, at *4 (C.D. Cal. 2019); Comm. Concerning Cnty. Improvement v. City of Modesto, 2004 WL 7334944 (E.D. Cal. 2004)).

Finally, Plaintiffs argue that Defendants are incorrect in their assertion that Plaintiffs' request for injunctive relief is "a thinly veiled request for monetary damages." Id. at 15. According to Plaintiffs, "An injunction commanding an employer to comply with applicable wage-and-hour laws is not a money judgment for damages, even though its effect if the employer complies is payment of money from the employer to the employee for services rendered." Id.

III. ANALYSIS

A. General Legal Standards Under Rule 23

A class action may be maintained under Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure if all of the requirements of Rule 23(a) are satisfied and the plaintiff demonstrates that one of the requirements of Rule 23(b) is met as well. Rule 23(a) requires that a plaintiff seeking to assert claims on behalf of a class demonstrate: 1) numerosity; 2) commonality; 3) typicality; and 4) fair and adequate representation of the interests of the class. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a). Plaintiffs seeks certification under Rule 23(b)(2), which allows a class action to be maintained where "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2).

B. General Legal Standards Governing Article III Standing

Standing is a threshold jurisdictional requirement derived from Article III's case-or-controversy requirement. See U.S. Const. art. III, § 2, cl. 1. In Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, the Supreme Court found "that the irreducible constitutional minimum of standing contains three elements." 504 U.S. 555, 561 (1992). First, the plaintiff must have suffered an "injury in fact"—

1 an invasion of a legally protected interest which is (a) concrete and particularized and (b) actual or 2 imminent, not conjectural or hypothetical. Id. (citations omitted). Second, there must be a causal 3 connection between the injury and the conduct complained of, that is, the injury has to be fairly 4 traceable to the challenged action of the defendant, and not the result of the independent action of 5 some third party not before the court. Id. (citations omitted). Third, it must be likely, as opposed 6 to merely speculative, that the injury will be redressed by a favorable decision. Id.

7 C. The Relationship Between Rule 23 and Article III Standing

8 As this Court discussed in its Article III Standing Order, application of the Article III 9 standing test in the class context is “complicated . . . because a named plaintiff seeks to litigate the 10 claims of others” Newberg on Class Actions § 2.6. Thus, while the “underlying standing 11 principle is that the injury that a plaintiff suffers defines the scope of the controversy she is 12 entitled to litigate,” in the class context there is a “disjuncture” because “the class representative 13 may seek to litigate harms not precisely analogous to the ones she suffered but harms that were 14 nonetheless suffered by other class members.” Id. In this context, the Ninth Circuit has endorsed 15 what it has described as the “class certification approach” over the so-called “standing approach” 16 at least twice. See Melendres, 784 F.3d at 1262; Snyder, 922 at 967.

17 In Melendres, the court described the two approaches as follows:

18 The “standing approach” treats dissimilarities between the claims of 19 named and unnamed plaintiffs as affecting the “standing” of the 20 named plaintiff to represent the class. In other words, if there is a 21 disjuncture between the injuries suffered by named and unnamed 22 plaintiffs, courts applying the standing approach would say the 23 disjuncture deprived the named plaintiff of standing to obtain relief 24 for the unnamed class members. See, e.g., Blum v. Yaretsky, 457 U.S.
991, 999–1002, 102 S.Ct. 2777, 73 L.Ed.2d 534 (1982). The “class certification approach,” on the other hand, “holds that once the named plaintiff demonstrates her individual standing to bring a claim, the standing inquiry is concluded, and the court proceeds to consider whether the Rule 23(a) prerequisites for class certification have been met.” Newberg On Class Actions § 2:6.

25 784 F.3d at 1261-1262. The court found that the class certification approach “has been embraced 26 several times (though not always) by the Supreme Court, and is the one adopted by ‘most’ other 27 federal courts to have addressed the issue.” Id. (quoting Newberg on Class Actions § 2:6; and 28

1 citing Sosna v. Iowa, 419 U.S. 393, 397–403 (1975); Novella v. Westchester Cnty., 661 F.3d 128, 2 149–50 & n. 24 (2d Cir.2011); Prado–Steiman ex rel. Prado v. Bush, 221 F.3d 1266, 1279–80
3 (11th Cir. 2000) (a court must first determine whether “at least one named class representative has 4 Article III standing,” then “question whether the named plaintiffs have representative capacity, as 5 defined by Rule 23(a), to assert the rights of others” (internal quotation marks omitted)); Fallick v.
6 Nationwide Mut. Ins. Co., 162 F.3d 410, 423 (6th Cir.1998); Cooper v. Univ. of Tex. at Dallas, 7 482 F.Supp. 187, 191 (N.D.Tex.1979)).

8 The plaintiffs in Melendres brought a class action against Sheriff Joseph Arpaio and the 9 Maricopa County Sheriff’s Office for declaratory and injunctive relief, alleging that the defendants 10 had a “custom, policy and practice” of “racially profiling Latino drivers and passengers, and of 11 stopping them pretextually under the auspices of enforcing federal and state immigration-related 12 laws.” 784 F.3d at 1258 (citation omitted). The district court entered a judgment against the 13 defendants enjoining them from using race as a factor in deciding whether to stop any vehicle with 14 a Latino occupant. Id. The injunction applied to stops during both “saturation patrols”—when the 15 defendant officers would saturate a particular area for the purpose of enforcing immigration 16 laws—and nonsaturation patrols. Id. The defendants appealed, arguing inter alia, that the 17 plaintiffs lacked standing to bring constitutional claims on behalf of class members stopped during 18 nonsaturation patrols because the named plaintiffs had been stopped only during saturation patrols.
19 Id. at 1259.

20 Applying the class certification approach discussed above, the court in Melendres 21 concluded that “the individually named plaintiffs . . . had individual standing to bring their own 22 claims under the Fourth and Fourteenth Amendments” and that they could represent the absent 23 class members whose claims were based on stops conducted during nonsaturation patrols because 24 the named plaintiffs’ claims did not “implicate a significantly different set of concerns” than the 25 unnamed plaintiffs’ claims. Id. at 1263 (quoting Gratz v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 244, 265 (2003)).
26 While the Melendres court applied the class certification approach, it indicated that it would have 27 reached the same conclusion even if it had applied the standing approach. Id. (“Under the class 28 certification approach, or the standing approach for that matter, the named plaintiffs in this case, .

1 . . . are adequate representatives because the named plaintiffs' claims do not 'implicate a 2 significantly different set of concerns' than the unnamed plaintiffs' claims.") (emphasis added).
3 The court went on to caution that "[i]n determining what constitutes the same type of relief or the 4 same kind of injury, 'we must be careful not to employ too narrow or technical an approach.
5 Rather, we must examine the questions realistically: we must reject the temptation to parse too 6 finely, and consider instead the context of the inquiry.'" Id. (quoting Armstrong v. Davis, 275 7 F.3d 849, 867 (9th Cir. 2001)).

8 As discussed further below, the Ninth Circuit has not addressed whether the class 9 certification approach applied in Melendres also applies in a case where, as here, the named 10 plaintiff has individual standing to assert claims under the laws of one state but seeks to represent 11 class members who assert claims under a different state's laws. There is disagreement among 12 district courts in the Ninth Circuit that have addressed this question.

13 D. Whether Sedlock Has Standing to Represent the Proposed Class

14 In this case, Defendants' standing challenges are asserted on two main grounds. First, they 15 object that Sedlock does not have standing to assert the claims of the putative class because 16 although he is playing under a contract with MLB, he does not play for any of the Clubs that are 17 defendants in this case. Second, they contend Sedlock may not assert the claims of the (b)(2) class 18 members that arise under California and Arizona law because he has never worked as a minor 19 league player in either state. The Court concludes that as to the first question, although Sedlock 20 has standing to assert his claims against MLB, he does not have standing to assert any claims 21 against the Franchise Defendants. The Court concludes that the second question is governed by 22 Rule 23 rather than Article III but that even if this question is addressed as a matter of standing, 23 Sedlock has standing to represent class members' claims under the laws of Arizona and California 24 (as well as Florida, where he performs services under the UPC). Nonetheless, the Court concludes 25 the scope of the (b)(2) class must be narrowed in order to satisfy the requirements of Rule 23.

1 1. Whether Sedlock has standing to assert claims on behalf of the (b)(2) class
2 against MLB⁷ and the Franchise Defendants

3 Regardless of whether or not the Court applies the class certification approach or the 4 standing approach, Sedlock must, as a threshold matter, establish that he has individual standing to 5 pursue his claims against Defendants, that is, that he has suffered an “injury in fact” that is fairly 6 traceable to the challenged action of the defendant, and not the result of the independent action of some third party not before the court.

7 The Court has no difficulty finding that Sedlock has standing to sue MLB as a joint 8 employer. The question of whether MLB is a joint employer will turn on, inter alia, whether 9 MLB has the power to hire and fire Sedlock, the degree to which it supervises and controls his 10 work schedule and conditions of employment, whether it determines the rate and method of 11 payment, and the employment records it maintains. See First Class Certification Order at 79
12 (addressing joint employer doctrine under the FLSA). Contrary to Defendants’ assertion, Sedlock 13 did not concede at his deposition that MLB is not his joint employer. See King Reply Decl., Ex. A 14 (Sedlock Depo.) at 125-126. Rather, he testified that while he “only played” for the Baltimore 15 Orioles, he performed services for MLB and the Office of the Commissioner during spring 16 training because the Office of the Commissioner oversaw policies governing drug testing, per 17 diem payments and “not being paid a salary.” Id. Therefore, Sedlock has individual standing to 18 assert his claims against MLB.

19 The more difficult question is whether he has individual standing to assert his claims 20 against the Franchise Defendants, which requires that he have suffered an injury that is “fairly 21 traceable” to those defendants. Plaintiffs rely on partnership law to establish that Sedlock can 22 assert his claims against the Franchises, pointing to the general rule “that an unincorporated 23 association is not a legal entity apart from its members, [and therefore that] the members of an 24 unincorporated association may be held civilly liable as individuals for the acts or omissions of the 25 association, whether in contract or tort.” 6 AM. JUR. 2D Associations and Clubs § 27. They have 26

⁷ Plaintiffs stipulated at the hearing that they do not assert their injunctive relief claims against 28 Defendant Bud Selig, who was the Commissioner of Baseball at the time this action was initiated but no longer holds that position.

1 not, however, pointed to any authority applying this rule in the context of Article III standing, 2 much less holding that because a member of an unincorporated association is liable for the acts of 3 the partnership, a named plaintiff has standing to sue that member on behalf of other class 4 members who were injured by the association member even if the named plaintiff sustained no 5 injury directly traceable to that member.

6 A case that addresses a similar question, albeit in dicta, is the Second Circuit's decision in 7 Langan v. Johnson & Johnson Consumer Companies, Inc., 897 F.3d 88, 92 (2d Cir. 2018). As 8 discussed further below, the Langan court found that the question of whether class representatives 9 can assert claims under the laws of other states even though their own claims did not arise under 10 those states' laws is a Rule 23 question rather than a question of standing. In reaching that 11 conclusion, however, the court distinguished the situation where the claims of the putative class 12 are asserted against "a particular defendant when that defendant did not actually injure a named 13 plaintiff." 897 F.3d at 94 (citing Mahon v. Ticor Title Ins. Co., 683 F.3d 59, 62 (2d Cir. 2012)).
14 The Langan court observed:

15 We have held that the claims of putative class members are too 16 dissimilar to support standing against a particular defendant when that 17 defendant did not actually injure a named plaintiff. In Mahon, we 18 considered a putative consumer class action against title insurance 19 companies that allegedly concealed the availability of reduced rates.
20 See id. at 60. The district court denied certification as to one of the 21 defendant companies that had not actually sold insurance to the 22 plaintiff, and we affirmed. See id. at 60–61. Even though the company used forms and practices that were similar to those used by the company that did sell to the plaintiff and was owned by the same parent company, we held that the plaintiff lacked standing to sue the company that had not actually misled her because, "with respect to each asserted claim" against each defendant, "a plaintiff must always have suffered a distinct and palpable injury to herself." Id. at 64 (alterations, quotation marks, and emphasis omitted).

23 897 F.3d at 94 (emphasis added)). The holding of Mahon and the reasoning in Langan, which the 24 Court finds persuasive, suggests that class representatives who seek to assert claims on behalf of 25 class members must establish, as a threshold matter of standing, that at least one named class 26 representative was injured by each defendant against whom class claims are asserted.

27 Here, as in Mahon, Sedlock seeks to represent class members who played for other 28 Franchises, which admittedly did not injure Sedlock. Moreover, the Franchise he plays for (the 1 Baltimore Orioles) is not a Defendant in this action. Under these circumstances, the Court 2 concludes that Sedlock cannot satisfy the “fairly traceable” requirement of Article III standing as 3 to the Franchise Defendants.

4 This conclusion is not changed by the fact that the court has previously found that the 5 MLB and the Clubs are “juridically linked” and therefore, that typicality under Rule 23 was not 6 defeated by the fact that there were was not a named plaintiff employed by each of the Franchise 7 Defendants. See First Class Certification Order at 63-65 (“the Court finds that MLB and the 8 franchise Defendants are ‘juridically related,’ because they have come together to form MLB by 9 enacting the MLB constitution and have jointly issued the MLB rules and UPC pursuant to that 10 constitution.”). “[T]he juridical link doctrine relates only to the question of class certification 11 under the Federal Rules and thus has no bearing on the Article III standing inquiry.” Mahon v.
12 Ticor Title Ins. Co., 683 F.3d 59, 61 (2d Cir. 2012). Therefore, the Court declines to certify the 13 (b)(2) class as to claims asserted against the Franchise Defendants.

14 2. Whether Sedlock has standing to assert claims on behalf of the (b)(2) class 15 that arise under Arizona and California law

16 “At least historically, ‘[c]ourts routinely dismiss claims where no plaintiff is alleged to 17 reside in a state whose laws the class seeks to enforce.’ ” Kutza v. Williams-Sonoma, Inc., No. 18-18 CV-03534-RS, 2018 WL 5886611, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Nov. 9, 2018) (quoting Corcoran v. CVS 19 Health Corp., 169 F. Supp. 3d 970, 990 (N.D. Cal. 2016) (citing In re Aftermarket Auto. Lighting 20 Products Antitrust Litig., 2009 WL 9502003, at *6 (C.D. Cal. July 6, 2009)). District courts in the 21 Ninth Circuit have disagreed, however, whether Melendres casts doubt on this approach. As 22 courts on both sides of this issue have acknowledged, in Melendres the claims “were federal and 23 constitutional claims, so standing to assert state-law claims was not at issue, and the ‘disjuncture’ 24 involved differing factual situations, rather than the differing laws.” Id. at *3 (concluding that 25 under Melendres, whether a class can assert “sister circuit claims” is governed by the class 26 certification approach); c.f. Jones v. Micron Tech. Inc., 400 F. Supp. 3d 897, 909 (N.D. Cal.
27 2019) (distinguishing Melendres on the basis that the “plaintiffs alleged that they suffered the 28 same constitutional injury, only in different factual circumstances.”). The question is whether this

1 distinction matters.

2 In In re Chrysler-Dodge-Jeep Ecodiesel Mktg., Sales Pracs., & Prod. Liab. Litig., in which 3 Judge Chen took the class certification approach in addressing this issue, the named plaintiffs 4 sought to “bring claims under the laws of states where they reside[d] or transacted with 5 defendants, as well as under the laws of states where they [did] not reside and where they did not 6 transact with defendants, but where other putative class members do or did.” 295 F. Supp. 3d 927, 7 955 (N.D. Cal. 2018). Judge Chen concluded that while the “disjuncture” in Melendres was 8 “different” because it was “factual” and did not involve sister circuit claims, “[u]ltimately . . . this 9 distinction appear[ed] immaterial.” Id. He found that “[a]s in Melendres, there [was] a 10 ‘disjuncture between the claims of the named plaintiffs and absent class members[]’ . . . [a]nd 11 when such a disjuncture exists, Melendres requires courts in the Ninth Circuit to apply the ‘class 12 certification approach.’ ” Id. (quoting Melendres, 784 F.3d at 1261); see also Kutza v. Williams- 13 Sonoma, Inc., 2018 WL 5886611, at *2.

14 On the other hand, Judge White reached the opposite conclusion in Jones v. Micron Technology Inc., concluding that the holding of Melendres does not extend to the sister circuit 15 scenario:

16 [I]n Melendres, all plaintiffs alleged that they suffered the same 17 constitutional injury, only in different factual circumstances. Here, 18 because Plaintiffs bring claims under the laws of multiple states (some 19 antitrust and some not), Plaintiffs technically invoke different legally 20 protected interests. See Restatement (Second) of Torts § 7 cmt. a (1965) (noting that injury involves an actionable invasion of a legally protected interest, while harm denotes personal loss or detriment).

21 400 F. Supp. 3d 897, 909 (N.D. Cal. 2019). The court reasoned that the plaintiffs “must show they 22 have standing for each claim they raise, and Plaintiffs do not have standing to bring claims under 23 the laws of states where they have alleged no injury, residence, or other pertinent connection.” Id.
24 (citing Pardini v. Unilever United States, Inc., 961 F. Supp. 2d 1048, 1061 (N.D. Cal. 2013); *In re
25 Packaged Seafood Prod. Antitrust Litig.*, 242 F. Supp. 3d 1033, 1096–97 (S.D. Cal. 2017)
26 (discussing Melendres, 784 F.3d at 1261–62)).

27 The undersigned agrees with the courts in Kutza v. Williams-Sonoma Inc. and In re 28 Chrysler-Dodge-Jeep Ecodiesel Mktg., Sales Practices, & Product Liability Litigation that

1 although the disjuncture in Melendres was factual, the reasoning of that case applies equally to 2 disjunctures based on sister circuit claims. As the court in Jones acknowledges, the state law 3 claims of putative class members “technically involve different legally protected interests,” 400 F.
4 Supp. 3d at 909 (emphasis added), yet the Ninth Circuit in Melendres cautioned courts not to take 5 “too narrow or technical an approach” in determining “what constitutes the same type of relief or 6 the same kind of injury.” 784 F.3d at 1263. Rather, the Melendres court concluded that even 7 under the standing approach, the named plaintiffs were adequate representatives of the putative 8 class because “the named plaintiffs’ claims do not implicate a significantly different set of 9 concerns[.]” Id. at 1263 (internal quotations and citations omitted). Here, it is clear that Sedlock 10 has standing, at a minimum, to assert his wage and hour claims under Florida law against MLB.
11 As these claims do not implicate a significantly different set of concerns than the claims of the 12 putative class members under Arizona and California law, the Court concludes any further inquiry 13 as to whether Sedlock should be permitted to represent the proposed (b)(2) class in pursuing the 14 sister circuit claims is appropriately addressed under Rule 23.⁸

15 This conclusion is consistent with the reasoning in Langan, which addressed “whether 16 there is a standing problem when a plaintiff attempts to sue on behalf of those who may have 17 claims under different states’ laws that generally prohibit the same conduct.” 897 F.3d at 95. The 18 court found that this question should be addressed under Rule 23, an approach that “makes sense” 19 because it “acknowledges the obvious truth that class actions necessarily involve plaintiffs 20 litigating injuries that they themselves would not have standing to litigate.” Id. Moreover, the 21 court found, “[t]his approach also accords with the Supreme Court’s preference for dealing with

22

23 ⁸At oral argument, Defendants argued that it is already “law of the case” that there must be a 24 named plaintiff for each of the states whose laws are being invoked, citing the Article III Standing 25 Order. As noted above, in that Order, the Court observed that Plaintiffs’ “allegations in the SCAC 26 may be sufficient to show Article III standing because all of the Franchise Defendants are alleged 27 to have employed one or more named Plaintiff, there is a named Plaintiff who has standing to invoke every state’s law and all Plaintiffs have demonstrated actual injury by alleging that one of the Franchise Defendants failed to pay them at all for some work and also failed to pay them required overtime.” Article III Standing Order at 20. The Court expressly declined to decide the question of Article III standing, however, and was not called upon to address the situation that is presented here, where there is not a named plaintiff who can invoke every state’s law. Therefore, the Court rejects Defendants’ assertion that the Court has already decided this question.

modest variations between class members' claims as substantive questions, not jurisdictional ones." Id. (citing Gratz v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 244, 266 (2003) (explaining that differences in use of race between transfer- and freshman-admissions policies "clearly ha[d] no effect on petitioners' standing to challenge the [policies]" but "might be relevant to a narrow tailoring analysis"); Lewis v. Casey, 518 U.S. 343, 358 n.6 (1996) ("The standing determination is quite separate from certification of the class.")). Finally, the court in Langan pointed out that "the only other circuit to have addressed this issue has reached the same conclusion." Id. at 95-96 (citing Morrison v. YTB Int'l, Inc., 649 F.3d 533, 536 (7th Cir. 2011) (explaining that whether plaintiff could bring putative class action on behalf of out-of-state class members "ha[d] nothing to do with standing, though it may affect whether a class should be certified—for a class action arising under the consumer-fraud laws of all 50 states may not be manageable, even though an action under one state's law could be"))). The undersigned finds the reasoning in Langan on this question to be persuasive.

Accordingly, the Court addresses the question of whether Sedlock can represent the class members' claims under California and Arizona law under Rule 23.

E. Whether the Proposed Class Satisfies the Requirements of Rule 23(b)(2)

Plaintiffs' proposed (b)(2) class may be certified if it satisfies all of the requirements of Rule 23(a) (numerosity, commonality, typicality and adequacy) as well as the requirements if subsection (b)(2).

1. Numerosity

It is undisputed that Rule 23(a)(1)'s numerosity requirement is satisfied.

2. Commonality

Likewise, the Court finds that the proposed class satisfies the commonality requirement. As the Court discussed in its First Class Certification Order, the threshold for meeting the commonality requirement is relatively low. First Class Certification Order at 63. Plaintiffs are required to demonstrate only that their claims "depend upon a common contention 'such that determination of its truth or falsity will resolve an issue that is central to the validity of each [claim] with one stroke.' " Id. at 62 (quoting Mazza v. Am. Honda Motor Co., 666 F.3d 581, 588 (9th Cir. 2012) (internal citation omitted) (quoting Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes, 564 U.S. 338,

1 350 (2011)). “ ‘The existence of shared legal issues with divergent factual predicates is sufficient, 2 as is a common core of salient facts coupled with disparate legal remedies within the class.’ ” Id.
3 (quoting Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1019 (9th Cir. 1998)).

4 In the First Class Certification Order, the Court found that even though the proposed 5 classes did not meet the more stringent predominance requirement under Rule 23(b)(3), they met 6 the commonality requirement, explaining its conclusion as follows:

7 [Plaintiffs] have asserted three core claims that arise from the 8 compensation policies set forth in the UPC and MLRs, namely, failure 9 to pay players a salary outside the championship season, failure to pay 10 overtime, and failure to pay minimum wage during the championship 11 season. Plaintiffs present common evidence to show that all minor league players are subject to these policies and therefore, their legality will raise common questions of law that are likely [to] drive the resolution of the litigation.

12 Id. at 62-63. The same is true here. Further, the Court rejects Defendants’ argument that Plaintiffs 13 have “reintroduced” a lack of commonality by broadening the proposed class definition to include 14 off-season work, similar to Plaintiffs’ original proposed classes. As Plaintiffs point out, even 15 though the Court declined to certify the original classes under Rule 23(b)(3) for failure to meet the 16 predominance requirement, it found that those classes satisfied the commonality requirement.
17 While the breadth of the proposed class definition raises questions as to typicality and adequacy, it 18 does not defeat commonality.

19 3. Typicality

20 Under Rule 23(a)(3), “the [legal] claims or defenses of the representative parties [must be] 21 typical of the claims or defenses of the class.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3). “Typicality refers to the 22 nature of the claim or defense of the class representative and not on facts surrounding the claim or 23 defense.” Hunt v. Check Recovery Sys., Inc., 241 F.R.D. 505, 510 (N.D. Cal. 2007) (citing Hanon 24 v. Dataprods. Corp., 976 F.2d 497, 508 (9th Cir. 1992)). “The test of typicality is whether other 25 members have the same or similar injury, whether the action is based on conduct which is not 26 unique to the named plaintiffs, and whether other class members have been injured by the same 27 course of conduct.” Hanon v. Dataproducts Corp., 976 F.2d 497, 508 (9th Cir. 1992). The purpose 28 of the typicality requirement is closely related to the adequacy requirement under Rule 23(a)(4) in

1 that it ensures that “the named plaintiff’s claim and the class claims are so interrelated that the 2 interests of the class members will be fairly and adequately protected in their absence.” Gen. Tel.
3 Co. of Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 158 n.13 (1982) (noting that the typicality and adequacy 4 requirements “tend to merge[,]” “although the [adequacy] requirement also raises concerns about 5 the competency of class counsel and conflicts of interest.”).

6 In the Court’s Second Class Certification Order, the Court found that the claims of the four 7 then-current players who sought to represent the proposed classes met this requirement “because 8 they [were] ‘reasonably coextensive with those of the absent class members.’ ” Second Class 9 Certification Order at 49 (quoting Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1020 (9th Cir. 1998); 10 and citing Broshuis Decl., Exs. E & F). The Court’s conclusion was based, in part, on the fact that 11 Plaintiffs had narrowed the proposed classes to exclude off-season work. Id. at 49-50 (“To the 12 extent that the Court expressed concern regarding the typicality of Named Plaintiffs’ claims in 13 connection with off-season training performed in different states, Certification Order at 65, that 14 concern has been addressed by Plaintiffs’ new Rule 23 Classes, which do not seek to assert claims 15 based on off-season training on a classwide basis.”). Likewise, in addressing the choice-of-law 16 concerns expressed by the dissent on appeal, the Ninth Circuit relied on those same limitations:

17 The California class consisted of those players who participated in the 18 California League, which plays games exclusively within California 19 during the championship season. The Arizona and Florida classes 20 consisted of those who performed during spring training, extended spring training, and the instructional leagues in those states. Thus, the dissent’s fear that employers will be required to research applicable state laws whenever an employee crosses state lines is overstated.

21 F.3d 918, 932 n. 8 (9th Cir. 2019), cert. denied, 141 S. Ct. 248 (2020).

22 The Court concludes that to the extent Plaintiffs’ proposed (b)(2) class seeks to include all 23 activities performed under the UPC by minor leaguers in the three states rather than limiting the 24 proposed class to the activities that the Court previously found satisfied the typicality requirement, 25 the concerns it previously expressed with respect to individual inquiries and choice of law once 26 again apply. Nothing in the Ninth Circuit’s opinion suggests that the performance of a wide 27 variety of off-season activities by minor leaguers who happen to be in one of these states for 28

1 varying periods of time will not raise choice-of-law questions as to individual class members.⁹
2 Therefore, the Court finds that the proposed (b)(2) class must be limited to services performed 3 under the UPC during spring training, the championship season and the instructional leagues to 4 meet the typicality requirement.

5 Even with that limitation, the Court must address whether Sedlock's claims are 6 "reasonably coextensive" with the claims of minor league player who played in Arizona and 7 California given that he has no connection to either of those states. Defendants argue that they are 8 not, pointing to the Ninth Circuit's conclusion that the relevant wage and hour laws of California, 9 Arizona and Florida are materially different to support its argument. In particular, the Ninth 10 Circuit stated:

11 [W]e agree with defendants that the differences in state law are 12 "material," meaning that "they make a difference in this litigation."
13 Mazza, 666 F.3d at 590. For example, some states have more 14 expansive definitions of "work," others have differing available 15 defenses, and we have previously held that the elements for a quantum meruit claim—alleged in both the Arizona and Florida classes—"vary materially from state to state." Id. at 591 (citing Candace S. Kovacic, A Proposal to Simplify Quantum Meruit Litigation, 35 Am. U.L. Rev.
547, 558–60 (1986)).

16 934 F.3d at 933. Yet that discussion was in the context of applying California's choice of law 17 analysis, not in connection with determining typicality under Rule 23. Rule 23 envisions that the 18 claims of the class members may not be identical to the named plaintiffs' claims, suggesting that 19 the claims of a named plaintiff may be typical of the class members' claims even if some class 20 members' claims are governed by the laws of other states. Under Melendres, the question is 21 whether the claims of the named plaintiff implicate a significantly different set of concerns than 22 the unnamed plaintiffs' claims.

23 Here, the briefing as to the differences between the laws of the three states and how they 24 render Sedlock's claims "atypical" as to the claims of minor league players who play in Arizona
25 and California is scant. Defendants point to the following examples in support of their position

27 ⁹ Although Plaintiffs' proposed (b)(2) class definition is broader than the one considered by the 28 Ninth Circuit and thus arguably exceeds the scope of the remand, Defendants have cited no authority that suggests that the undersigned does not have discretion to consider certifying a (b)(2) class that does not exactly match the definition that was the subject of the appeal.

1 that Sedlock's claims under Florida law are not typical of class members' claims under Arizona
2 and California law:

3 Take, for instance, the fact that California requires the payment of 4 daily overtime (id. at 245); that Arizona and Florida do not require 5 any overtime payment; that Florida law is interpreted under the FLSA 6 which now exempts minor league players from overtime requirements; and that each of the three states uses different tests to define compensable time (Ninth Circuit Remand at 29-30).

7 Opposition at 16. The Court gives some weight to the difference between the laws of the three 8 states with respect to the availability of overtime. To the extent that Sedlock may not seek 9 overtime under Florida law while class members who play in California law are entitled to 10 overtime, the Court finds that inclusion of class members whose claims are based on activities 11 performed in California defeats typicality. In particular, as Sedlock has no claim for overtime, his 12 claims may implicate a significantly different set of concerns than those of the California class 13 members (though this problem does not seem to exist as to the Arizona class members). On the 14 other hand, the Court is not persuaded that differences between the tests used to define 15 compensable time will defeat typicality if the (b)(2) class is narrowed to exclude off season work, 16 as discussed above. Likewise, the Court is not convinced that the possible defense Defendants 17 may have under Florida law based on the Save America's Pastime Act is sufficient to defeat 18 typicality as to the claims of class members asserting claims under Arizona law.

19 Therefore, the Court finds that while Sedlock does not meet the typicality requirement as 20 to claims based on services performed under the UPC during the off-season or in California, he 21 meets the typicality requirement as to a narrowed (b)(2) class that limits membership to 22 individuals who perform services under the UPC during spring training, the championship season 23 and the instructional leagues in Florida and Arizona.

24 4. Adequacy

25 Under Rule 23(a)(4), the class representative must "fairly and adequately protect the 26 interests of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4). To determine whether this requirement is met, 27 courts ask: "(1) do the named plaintiffs and their counsel have any conflicts of interest with other 28 class members and (2) will the named plaintiffs and their counsel prosecute the actions vigorously

1 on behalf of the class?” Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1020 (9th Cir. 1998).
2 Defendants have not pointed to any conflicts of interest on the part of Sedlock or counsel, but 3 contend Sedlock will not adequately represent the class because: 1) he is seeking damages on his 4 individual claims for uncompensated work (including off-season work performed outside of 5 Florida) he has performed during the duration of his contract with MLB, casting doubt on his 6 representation that injunctive relief is the “primary” form of relief he seeks; 2) the problems 7 discussed above with respect to typicality also make Sedlock an inadequate class representative; 8 and 3) Sedlock allegedly “refused to sit for his seven hour deposition during spring training.”
9 Opposition at 17-18.

10 The Court is not persuaded that Sedlock’s pursuit of damages for past conduct that mirrors 11 the conduct that is the subject of his injunctive relief claims makes it any less likely that he will 12 vigorously pursue the interests of the (b)(2) class. If anything, the overlap between the claims for 13 damages and the injunctive relief claims will likely increase his incentive to pursue injunctive 14 relief on behalf of the class. Moreover, Sedlock states in his declaration that he “plan[s] to 15 continue to seek to work for Defendants as a minor league player even if [he is] released or if [his] 16 UPC expires[,]” giving him an ongoing stake in MLB’s policies and practices with respect to the 17 compensation of minor league players. Sedlock Decl. [dkt. no. 923-1] ¶ 11.

18 As to the issues related to typicality that Defendants contend make Sedlock an inadequate 19 representative, the Court incorporates its conclusions on typicality here. In other words, to the 20 extent Sedlock meets the typicality requirement, he is also an adequate class representative.

21 The Court rejects Defendants’ reliance on what appears to be a garden-variety scheduling 22 dispute about the timing of Sedlock’s deposition to suggest he will not adequately represent the 23 proposed class. That argument is frivolous. The Court notes that throughout this case, both 24 Plaintiffs and Defendants have agreed that spring training poses special scheduling challenges 25 which should, when possible, be accommodated.

26 5. Rule 23(b)(2)

27 Defendants contend the proposed class should not be certified under subsection (b)(2) 28 because the relief it seeks is: 1) “antithetical” to the indivisibility requirement of Rule 23(b)(2); 2)

1 vague and nothing more than a bare injunction to follow the law; and 3) a “thinly-veiled request
2 for monetary damages.” The Court rejects all three arguments.

3 As to indivisibility, Defendants point to the following discussion of the nature of relief that 4 may be sought by (b)(2) classes in Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Dukes:

5 Rule 23(b)(2) allows class treatment when “the party opposing the 6 class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the 7 class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief 8 is appropriate respecting the class as a whole.” One possible reading 9 of this provision is that it applies only to requests for such injunctive 10 or declaratory relief and does not authorize the class certification of 11 monetary claims at all. We need not reach that broader question in 12 this case, because we think that, at a minimum, claims for 13 individualized relief (like the backpay at issue here) do not satisfy the 14 Rule. The key to the (b)(2) class is “the indivisible nature of the 15 injunctive or declaratory remedy warranted—the notion that the 16 conduct is such that it can be enjoined or declared unlawful only as to 17 all of the class members or as to none of them.” Nagareda, 84 18 N.Y.U.L.Rev., at 132. In other words, Rule 23(b)(2) applies only 19 when a single injunction or declaratory judgment would provide relief 20 to each member of the class. It does not authorize class certification 21 when each individual class member would be entitled to a different 22 injunction or declaratory judgment against the defendant. Similarly, 23 it does not authorize class certification when each class member 24 would be entitled to an individualized award of monetary damages.

25 564 U.S. 338, 360–61 (2011). While this discussion makes clear that it is improper to certify a 26 (b)(2) class that seeks individualized injunctive relief, it does not hold that injunctive relief may not be tailored to address different claims and subsets of the class where appropriate, including claims asserted under different states’ laws. Nor have Defendants cited any authority that supports that conclusion. The undersigned declines to adopt the expansive reading of Dukes proposed by Defendants and rejects their argument that the proposed (b)(2) class is antithetical to the indivisibility requirement.

27 Defendants also point to cases in which courts have held that so-called “obey-the-law” 28 injunctions are disfavored “as they are not narrowly tailored and are at odds [with] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 65(d), which requires that orders granting injunctive relief be ‘specific in terms’ and ‘describe in reasonable detail . . . the act or acts sought to be restrained.’ ” Roman v. MSL
Cap., LLC, No. EDCV172066JGBSPX, 2019 WL 3017765, at *5 (C.D. Cal. July 9, 2019), aff’d, 820 F. App’x 592 (9th Cir. 2020) (quoting Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, Inc. v. Grokster, Ltd., 1 518 F. Supp. 2d 1197, 1226 (C.D. Cal. 2007)). The cases Defendants cite are neither class actions 2 nor on point.

3 In Roman, the court denied a request for a preliminary injunction by a group of five 4 plaintiffs and their children who had prevailed in an action for housing discrimination under the 5 Fair Housing Act where the request was untimely. Roman, 2019 WL 3017765, at *4. Even if the 6 request had been timely, the court found, the plaintiffs had not demonstrated that injunctive relief 7 was warranted because “[w]hile [the plaintiffs] [had] not clarified the scope of the injunction they 8 [sought], it appear[ed] that what they [sought was] effectively a blanket order enjoining [the 9 defendants] from breaking the law, in addition to some sort of mandatory training” for the 10 individual defendant in the case. Id. at *1, 4. Nothing in Roman suggests that in this case 11 the injunctive relief the proposed (b)(2) class seeks cannot be crafted in a manner that is specific 12 enough to meet the requirements of Rule 65(d) or that this would be a legitimate reason to decline 13 to certify the (b)(2) class.

14 Likewise, Committee Concerning Community Improvement v. City of Modesto, does not 15 support Defendants’ position. See No. CV-F-04-6121 REC/DLB, 2004 WL 7334944, (E.D. Cal.
16 Dec. 30, 2004), on reconsideration, No. CV-F-04-6121 REC/DLB, 2005 WL 8162414 (E.D. Cal.
17 Mar. 23, 2005)). In that case, which was not a class action, the plaintiffs asserted housing 18 discrimination claims against the City of Modesto and other defendants under various statutes and 19 sought, inter alia, a preliminary and permanent injunction enjoining the defendants from 20 continuing to follow the illegal policies, practices, and procedures described in the complaint. Id.
21 at 1-3. On a motion to dismiss, the court recognized that “obey-the-law” injunctions are disfavored 22 but rejected the defendants’ argument that the plaintiff’s claim should be dismissed under Rule 23 12(b)(6) on that basis. Id. at *18 (“The court concurs with plaintiffs that the apparent 24 unavailability of the relief sought in connection with plaintiffs’ claims against the City regarding 25 annexation do not compel dismissal of these claims pursuant to Rule 12(b)(6)”). It went on to 26 dismiss the plaintiffs’ claim on the basis that they were time-barred. Id. at *18-19. Here, 27 Defendants do not contend the claims of the (b)(2) class are time-barred or more broadly, that the 28 theories that underly their claims are flawed as a matter of law. Therefore, Committee Concerning

1 Community Improvement v. City of Modesto sheds no light on the question of whether the (b)(2) 2 class here should be certified.

3 Defendants' reliance on the Ninth Circuit's recent decision in Hernandez Roman v. Wolf, 4 829 F. App'x 165, 175 (9th Cir. 2020) is also misplaced. In that case, the Ninth Circuit largely 5 affirmed the district court's decision granting a preliminary injunction requiring the government to 6 address claims of detained immigrants at a particular immigration facility (Adelanto) in the face of 7 a COVID-19 outbreak there. It nonetheless "vacate[d] the provisions of the preliminary injunction 8 that ordered specific measures to be implemented at Adelanto" because "[t]he district court 9 tailored those measures to respond to the circumstances at Adelanto as of mid-April" and "[i]n the 10 intervening five months, those circumstances have changed dramatically." Id. at 173-174. The 11 court remanded to the district court to consider what specific provisions were appropriate under 12 these changed circumstances and "ma[d]e some observations for the district court to consider on 13 remand." Id. at 174. One of those observations was that the CDC's guidelines for correctional 14 and detention facilities, which the district court had incorporated into its preliminary injunction, 15 did "not provide a workable standard for a preliminary injunction" because of their "vagueness," 16 leading the parties to strongly disagree on whether the defendant's practices were in compliance 17 with the preliminary injunction. Id. While this observation supports the general rule that an 18 injunction must "describe in reasonable detail . . . the acts restrained or required[]," Fed. R. Civ.
19 Proc. 65(d)(1)(C), the court's observation was based on the specific facts of the case and those 20 facts are in no way similar to the facts here.

21 Finally, the Court rejects Defendants' argument that the injunctive relief claims are but a 22 "thinly veiled" attempt to obtain damages and therefore that a (b)(2) class should not be certified.
23 Defendants' argument appears to be based on the Supreme Court's holding in Dukes that "Rule 24 23(b)(2) does not authorize class actions 'when each class member would be entitled to an 25 individualized award of monetary damages.' . . . [and that] 'only money damages that are 26 'incidental' to, as opposed to central to, the plaintiff's requested relief may be pursued in a class 27 action maintained under Rule 23(b)(2).'" Gomez v. J. Jacobo Farm Lab. Contractor, Inc., 334
28 F.R.D. 234, 253–54 (E.D. Cal. 2019), modified on reconsideration, No. 115CV01489AWIBAM,

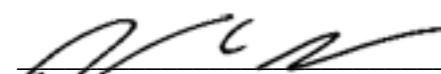

1 2020 WL 1911544 (E.D. Cal. Apr. 20, 2020), and modified, No. 115CV01489AWIBAM, 2021
2 WL 431402 (E.D. Cal. Feb. 8, 2021) (cited by Defendants in Opposition at 23) (quoting Dukes, 3 564 U.S. at 360). Here, however, the proposed (b)(2) classes do not seek any damages. Nor have 4 Defendants cited any authority for the proposition that an injunction requiring Defendants to pay 5 minimum wage and overtime amounts to an award of damages simply because it requires the 6 payment of money. Therefore, the Court rejects this argument.

7 IV. CONCLUSION

8 For the reasons stated above, the Motion is GRANTED in part and DENIED in part. The 9 parties shall meet and confer to address the specific wording of the Rule 23(b)(2) class definition that 10 the Court has approved, incorporating the limitations discussed above. If the parties can agree, a 11 stipulation shall be filed with the Court by August 27, 2021 containing the revised class definition. If 12 the parties are unable to agree, they should jointly file by the same date a statement, not to exceed five 13 pages, setting forth the competing proposed class definitions and explaining the basis for any 14 disagreements. In addition, the Court approves the appointment of Korein Tillery, LLC and Pearson, 15 Simon & Warshaw LLP as class counsel for all of the classes certified in this action. The parties are 16 requested to supply an agreed-upon proposed order appointing those firms as class counsel by August 17 27, 2021.

18 IT IS SO ORDERED.
